Professor Flubrer of the visiting surgical staff of Bellevue Hos, ital yesterday presented to a large gathering of medical gentlemen, among whom were Profs. Lewis A. Sayre, A. Post and Charles Mittendorf, Drs. Anderton, Putnam. Jacobi and others, the most remarkable case of successful surgical operation of the brain that ever came under the obser-vation of a surgeon and which still remains unexplained from the fact that the patient recovered and is at present ying the best of health.

The case has no parallel in the annals of medical literature and until it presented itself the most eclectic surgeon would have doubted the possiblity of introduc-ing the knife into the brain without fatal

The patient, Bruno Knorr, who yesterday sat in the amphitheatre of the hos-pital in the centre of a group of intensely interested physicians, who carefully examined his head, which was a mass of scars, showing where the bone was cut out, has a remarkable history. He is a well-formed young man, and were it not for his much-chopped up forehead, would be quite good looking. He appears to be of a very affectionate disposition, which is the cause of his strange wound. On the evening of January 23 last, as printed in the World at the time, he visited his sweetheart and asked her to marry him, but she declined; he pressed his suit, but was flatly refused, upon which he pulled out a revolver and fired a bullet into his brain. The ball entered the forehead, about an inch and a half above the eyes, directly in the centre. He fell to the ground with blood gushing pro-fusely from the wound. He was supposed to be dead, but nevertheless he was re-moved to Bellevue Hospital. Upon arriv-ing at that place the junior surgeons were surprised to find that he was still Through the night they but by his bedaide, intent upon making observa-tions as to how long he could really live, applying only such simple remedies as would ease the lest moments of a dying would ease the less moments of a dying man. But they miscalculated, for in the morning they found him still alive, although unconscious. Afraid to do anything upon their own responsibility, they telegraphed the visiting surgeon, Prof. Fluhrer, at daybreak, and he came at once in response to the summons, hardly supposing he could do anything for the patient. From certain peculiar surroundings, however, he was led to undertake a most hazardous operation, which he most hazardous operation, which he described to his listeners yesterday while standing at the side of the man whose life he had saved.

Finding the pulsation of the patient growing weaker and life slowly ebbing, he took the most desperate chances and resolved to operate at once. Feeling assured the brain was wounded, from the small particles of its substance that oozed through the hole made by the bullet, he boldly set to work, and, thinking that he could do no more than apply the last measures, he dissected off the flesh around the wound clean to the bone, holding back the flaps with pins, and then cut out a disc of the skull about the size of a dime with a trephine above the bullet hole, joining the two by chiselling away the bridge intervening. On at-tempting to remove the particles of bone which had been driven upon the brain matter by the bullet in its passage and had set up a dangerous condition by their pressure, he met with a profuse hemorrhage from one of the large arteries, which was cut across its gaffed edges scarcely to be seen. Two attempts to catch it up proved futile, and realizing that death from loss of blood under the circumstances was a matter of moment he introduced his finger into the wound and pressed the artery against the bone and for a time became master of the situ-ation. The exettion tired him soon and he instructed his assistant to relieve him while he again attempted to eatch the while he again attempted to catch the end. After five trials he was successful and placed a ligature of catgut around it. The little vessel, however, was tricky, and the ligature slipped off, leaving matters worse than before. Again he tried it and at last overcome the obstacle by tying it tightly. Next he introduced a bullet tipped probe, which descended by its own weight, about five inches into the brain, when he stopped abort and half its own weight, about two inches into the brain, when he stopped short and held it in place. Carefully studying the angle in which it entered he marked a point at the back of the head where it would if further pushed come out, and there cut off three flapsaround it and sawed through the head avening the head avening the head avening the the bone, exposing the brain coverings in the rear. There he cut through and met with a mass of dark, half-clotted blood mixed with particles of brain which floated about. This was carefully washed out.

first and felt the bullet, lodged as it was in the brain. With delicate foreceps it was pulled out through the opening be-hind. The operation occupied four hours. A rubber tube was drawn into the wound through the channel cut by the bullet by means of which the septic matter was allowed to flow. It remained there for allowed to flow. It remained there for over a month until recovery bad so far advanced that the patient was declared out of danger to the surprise of all and in conflict with the established roles in stagery. Prof. Flather enlightened his hearers with the treatment after the operation and presented a chart showing the variations of the oulse, temperature and respirations which he observed churing the progress of the case. He said great stress upon the difficulty he had in drawing out several horse hairs which he introduced around the drainage tube to prevent its adhering to the walls of the prevent its adhering to the walls of the

After the most critical stages had assed it was found that Knorr bad lost passed it was found that Knorr had lost his memory, powers of speech and was partially paralyzed, but he has recovered all his faculties and pronounced himself as safe and sound as a dollar when questioned by the doctors yesterday. The nearest approach of Knorr's case he one reported by Prof. Detmold of this city, who about fifty years ago trephfied the skull of a patient suffering from an abscess of the brain, which he located, and, by trephiaing the skull, exposed the brain and opened the abscess by cutting into it, but the patient only survived a few months, when he died from a recurrence of the disease.

I accordingly mounted "Juana," as my mule was called, and with pistols in the hoisters, and sabers and spurs jingling. I emerged from the sally-post into the open country. The road ran through the bottom of a deep and narrow ravine or canon, to where a couple of "prospectors" were washing the bed of a creek for gold. My object was to pay them a visit.

— A mother reminded her little boy, who was complaining at the mosquitoes, that doubtless they had been a constant to which we belong.

— A fittle boy discovered not ion that two of his teeth were loose. She is now swillow those. I don't want these old teeth coming up again."

The name Juana is in Spanish the feminine equivalent of Juan, and corres-ponds to our Jane or Jean or Joan. The reader may therefore not unreasonably suppose that my mule was a mare, but if he or she has any such idea, a great mis-take will be committed. The animal was of the masculine gender, big chested, strong limbed and endowed with greater powers of endurance and force of character than I have ever seen exhibited by any other of its hybrid species. He had, moreover, the reputation of being the most self willed and obstanate mule

When he had once made up his mind to a certain course of action no personner, entreaties, vituperations or punishments had the slight-est effect in causing him to change his determination. His former owner ! ad given bim his name. This individual, a good natured Mexican, had a wife named Juana, whose will was law in the household, and before whom her bushand bowed down in abject humility. The peor man to his rutter consternation found his wife's most striking qualities duplicated in his mule, and with the recklessness of despair he had carried out the comparison by giving the beast her name.

Juana cantered leisurely down the road, sniffing the air and tossing his head gaily till, when we had gone about two miles, he suddenly gave a loud snort, pricked up his ears, and planting his forepricked up his ears, and planting his fore-feet solidly on the ground, came to a dead stop. Now when Juana stopped in this abrupt manner it meant absolute cessation of forward motion in the fullest sense of the expression. So decided was his inertia on this occasion, that he sank down on his haunches, causing his back to become a ster judine place, while his fore legs, straight and rigid, stood far out in advance of his body. He had evi-dently prepared himself for the struggle with his rider, which he seeded to think with his rider, which he seeded to think was inevitable, but out of which he certainly intended to come victorious. I patted him on the back and neck, and in my most duicet tones requested him to go on. He shook his mane and head, and signified by his whole manner that not even to oblige me, would he budge a Finding that blandishments were ineffectual, I dug my spurs into his flanks till my legs ached; but all was to no purpose. There he stood as firm as a rock. He did not rear or kick. His resistance was entirely passive, but it was the will of an apparently unreasonable brute against that of an apparently reasonable man. As often happens, the appearances were deceitful. I pulled him round and he galloped back to the fort as rapidly as his legs could carry him. him. The next morning it was ascertained whenever he declined to do anything, or perform a particular act, he had some good reason, perfectly satisfactory to him-self, for his conduct; and he was quietly allowed to have his own way.

Total Honey.

Thousands and tens of thousands of children are dying all around us; who die because their ever-developing nature demand sweetness, crave and eagerly demolish the adulterated "candles" and "syrups" of modern ti.nes. If these could be fed on honey instead they would develop and grow up into healthy men and women. Children would rather eat bread and honey than bread and butter. One pound of honey will reach as far as two pounds of butter, and has, besides, the advantage of being far more healthy and pleasant tasted, and always remains good, while butter soon becomes rancid and often produces cramp in the stomach, cruciations, sorrness, vomiting and distributed. Pure honey should always be freely used in every family. Honey eaten upon wheat bread is very beneficial to health. The use of honey instead of sugar in almost every kind instead of sugar in almost every kind of cooking is as pleasant for the palate as it is healthy for the stomach. In preparing blackberry, raspberry or strawberry, chorteake it is infinitely auperior. It is a common expression that honey is a luxury, having nothing to do with the life-giving principle. This is an error—honey is food in one of its most concentrated forms. True, it does not add so much to the growth of muscles as does beefsteak, but it does impart other properties no less necessary to health and properties no less necessary to health and vigorous physical and intellectual action. It gives warmth to the system, arouse persons energy and gives vigor to all the yital functions. To the laborer it gives attength—to the business man mental large. force. Its effects are not like ordinary stimulants, such as spirits, etc., but produce a healthy action, the result of which is pleasing and permanent—a sweet disposition and a bright intellect.
